Background

Indigenous languages matter for development, good governance, peace building and reconciliation

Indigenous languages represent complex systems of knowledge developed and accumulated over thousands of years. Local languages are cultural treasures; they are repositories of diversity and key resources for understanding local environments and harnessing their potential to the best advantage of local populations, as well as of humanity as a whole. They foster and promote local cultural specificities, customs and values.

Each indigenous language represents a unique paradigm and framework for understanding the world. Elaborate vocabularies are constructed around topics of particular ecological, economic or sociocultural importance. Knowledge is often captured or encoded in specific words and therefore is not easily transferable among languages.

The loss of an indigenous language can mean the loss of vital knowledge, which could be harnessed for human improvement and sustainable development. Consequently, the disappearance of a language implies a considerable negative impact upon the indigenous culture concerned, as well as on global cultural diversity. Unique ways of knowing and experiencing the world may disappear forever.

Reasons for the endangerment of languages vary across different communities and locations, but all represent tremendous challenges to indigenous peoples, be they assimilation, enforced relocation, educational disadvantage, illiteracy, migration or other manifestations of potential discrimination leading to the possible disappearance of a culture or language.

In practical terms, the risk is that parents and elders can no longer transmit indigenous languages to their children and that indigenous languages fall out of daily use. The issues around indigenous languages could have much broader consequences, affecting a wide range of areas, including politics, law and justice, health, cultural practices and identities, the biosphere, access to information and communications tools, etc.

The celebration of the International Year of Indigenous Languages (IYIL2019) will encourage all stakeholders to respond appropriately to these challenges, by promoting and protecting the right of indigenous peoples to preserve and develop their languages.
International Year of Indigenous Languages (IYIL2019)

The United Nations General Assembly proclaimed 2019 as the International Year of Indigenous Languages (Ref.: 71/178) in order to raise global attention on the critical risks confronting indigenous languages, and their significance for sustainable development, reconciliation, good governance and peacebuilding.

The celebrations in 2019 will contribute to promoting and ensuring access to indigenous languages and to improving the lives of indigenous peoples by strengthening the capacities of indigenous language speakers and relevant indigenous peoples’ organizations.

The 2019 celebration will further contribute to the robustness and reinforcement of the many standard-setting tools adopted by the international community, among them specific provisions to promote and protect languages.

More specifically, the global celebration will also contribute to achieving the goals of the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples (2006), the Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169), of the International Labour Organization, the outcome document of the World Conference on Indigenous Peoples, held in 2014, and other relevant documents, including UNESCO conventions and recommendations, as well as the Sustainable Development Goals of the 2030 Agenda, the United Nations system-wide action plan on the rights of indigenous peoples, alongside other relevant regional and national frameworks.

Action Plan for the organization of the IYIL2019

Building upon UNESCO’s mandate, experience and leadership in promoting linguistic diversity and multilingualism around the world, as well as in its capacity as the lead United Nations agency for the organization of the International Year of Indigenous Languages (IYIL2019), UNESCO launched several consultations with a range of stakeholders to define major objectives, areas of interventions and further actions to be taken, during this International Year.

The outcome of this consultative process resulted in the elaboration of the Action Plan, which lays the foundation for implementation of United Nations General Assembly Resolution 71/178. The Action Plan was supported by the members of the 17th session of the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues (April 2018) and by the Expert Mechanism on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples (EMRIP) (July 2018).

The Action Plan for the IYIL2019 calls for a coherent approach and for joint collaborative action by all stakeholders to achieve positive impact and social change with regard to indigenous languages and their communities. It provides a comprehensive overview of key objectives, principles and actions to be taken during and beyond the IYIL2019.

A Steering Committee was constituted in April 2018 to provide guidance on the overall implementation of the United Nations Action Plan for the organization of the 2019 International Year of Indigenous Languages.
Major objectives of the IYIL2019

The International Year is an important mechanism of international cooperation, which is used to raise awareness of indigenous languages and to mobilize different stakeholders and resources for coordinated action around the world by preserving, supporting and promoting indigenous languages at national, regional and international level.

Main objectives of the IYIL2019 are to:

- Focus global attention on the critical risks confronting indigenous languages, while highlighting their importance for sustainable development, reconciliation, good governance and peacebuilding,

- Target steps which will lead to improved quality of life for indigenous peoples, enhanced international cooperation and strengthened intercultural dialogue, and reaffirm cultural and linguistic continuity, and

- Deliver increased capacities on the part of all stakeholders to take concrete and sustainable measures to support, access and promote indigenous languages around the world in accordance with the legitimate rights of indigenous peoples.

Official Global Launch event of the IYIL2019

This official launch event is co-organized by UNESCO, UNDESA, and the members of Steering Committee for the organization of the International Year, as well as with the participation of other relevant stakeholders.

To be held under the theme “Indigenous languages matter for sustainable development, peace building and reconciliation”, this official launch event will gather high-level governmental officials, indigenous peoples, civil society, academia, media and information organizations, United Nations agencies, public language harmonization and documentation institutions and private sector bodies.

The official launch event aims at providing a global forum for a constructive debate in which high-level speakers and prominent experts will address new paradigms for safeguarding, promoting and providing access to knowledge and information for the indigenous languages’ users.

UNESCO, in its capacity as leading UN agency of the International Year of Indigenous Languages, will organize the Official Global Launch event of the 2019 International Year on Indigenous Languages that will take place at UNESCO Headquarters in Paris, France, on Monday, 28 January 2019:

Global Social Media Campaign

Throughout 2019, UNESCO, in collaboration with a range of partners, will facilitate the organization of the International Year of Indigenous Languages.

To ensure IYIL2019 has global outreach, relevance, engagement and sustainability among indigenous language users, UNESCO encourages networks of indigenous peoples, civil society organizations, language activists and other social media partners to join a global social media "#IndigenousLanguages" campaign.

All partners who have established grassroots networks and have shown commitment, availability and long-lasting support in their approach to language activism are welcome to join UNESCO’s efforts to promote the use of indigenous languages by taking advantage of technological development and spread of social media around the world.

A group of dedicated partners will be involved in the global social media “#IndigenousLanguages” campaign. Throughout the year, this coalition will be launching various campaigns and events, leveraging the internet as a force for good for indigenous languages around the world, while also bridging gaps between different stakeholders around the world.

Advice for speakers at technical international meetings with simultaneous interpretation

You will shortly be attending a technical bilingual/multilingual meeting. Some of the delegates will be unable to understand you. This is why your message will be conveyed to them through simultaneous interpretation.

Interpreters need access to working documents in order to prepare for the meeting. Interpreters must have access to as much information as you can provide on the topic of your presentation (text of the speech, power points, slides, abstract, background) in order to do a good job. They are bound to the strictest level of confidentiality and will check against delivery. Please send all relevant documents in advance (interpretation.services@unesco.org) – and indicate the subject of your meeting or dates.

If you speak freely, your tone and body language will help you communicate with your audience. But, if you read a text, you will tend to speak in a ‘written style’, your delivery will be faster and unmodulated. This makes it much harder to follow if the interpreter doesn’t have the text you are reading from, and this applies to slides which are often read very quickly from a screen interpreters cannot see.

Do remember that some delegates will be listening to you directly in what is effectively for them a foreign language. So if you do read, try to adapt your pace and modulate your tone to reach out to all delegates. Remember some delegates might be less familiar with your branch of surgery so do not hesitate to provide explanations (names and acronyms in particular).
Finally remember that the interpretation team is at your service and will do its best to help you communicate and follow the discussion. Do not hesitate to contact the head of team in the interpretation booths if necessary.
