1. ResiliArt: Status of the Artist in the Africa Region (28 July 2020)

“In these challenging times, the 2005 Convention and the 1980 Recommendation will provide us with the necessary tools to keep the CCIs afloat.” Avinash Teeluck, Minister of Arts and Cultural Heritage of Mauritius, opened the regional ResiliArt debate, co-organized by UNESCO Field Offices across the region. “It is high time for each African nation to help artists and creative workers continue to engage in the process of creativity without having to take on other jobs to support their living. New legislations are necessary to recognize their positive contribution to their country’s economy and society.”

ResiliArt: Status of the Artist gathered leaders in the arts and culture across Africa. Angela Martins, Head for Culture at African Union Commission, shared three instruments that reinforce support for artists: the Charter for African Cultural Renaissance, AU Agenda 2063, and AU Plan of Action on Cultural Renaissance. Martins called for “better collaboration between the arts, cultural and heritage sector and policy and decision makers in the Member States” in order to usher in an era of African development that capitalizes on creative talents across Africa.

The topic of artistic freedom was also addressed by the panelists as well as members of the audience who participated actively through the chat function. “Across the continent, there are still legislations that limit artistic freedom. We must not limit creativity. We must not limit the imagination of artists,” said Kimani Njogu, Creative Economy Group in Kenya. The debate

2. Youth and Resilience through Urban Dance (27 July 2020)

"Youth and resilience through urban dance in times of confinement" was organized on 27 July 2020 by the UNESCO San José and the General Secretariat of SICA (Central American Integration System). During the virtual dialogue, young people from the region had the opportunity to highlight the importance of the cultural expressions of the youth of the SICA region, especially urban dance, as they live alongside COVID-19. ResiliArt was part the launch of the urban dance competition Convi-32, organized by the FreeXclavos collective and the Contra-Peso Foundation from Panama.

"Action is necessary, but so is conversation." Panelists agreed that there have been the surprising positive aspects of the lockdown measures for their artistic community. As urban dancing moved to the digital environment, dancers started to host virtual discussions in order to share experiences and take a more multidisciplinary approach to their artform. One panelist mentioned a recent discussion on emotional intelligence in urban dance and the benefit of dancing when facing a crisis like COVID-19.

Esther Kuisch-Laroche, Director of the UNESCO Office in San José, agrees. “The essence of urban dance, as well as many other cultural activities, is in the meeting and in the use of public space. But Convi-32, launched in Panama, invites us to explore the limits of these cultural manifestations. It shows us that confinement is not an obstacle to expressing our cultural expressions... dance can be transformed into powerful tools for intercultural dialogue and integration.”

Ahram Online (24 July – Egypt)

“UNESCO movement ResiliArt holds panel discussion on effects of COVID-19 on music, film industries”

In a panel discussion held on Tuesday, ResiliArt, a UNESCO movement, explored the effects of the COVID-19 pandemic on the music and film industries.

The topics explored questions around what can be done to protect creators and artists who are disproportionately affected by the pandemic, and how the music and film industries can be part of solutions to the global challenges facing our world.

RFI Brazil (22 July 2020 – Brazil)

“Young poets from Rio de Janeiro communities report the impact of the pandemic on culture at Unesco”

MC Martina and Matheus de Araújo hold poetry and writing workshops with the London organization People’s Palace Projects, which operates in Brazil. "Culture has never been a protagonist here in this land. We live in a land that seems to rule against us. We have to create other strategies in order to continue to survive," reports the charismatic Martina, creator of Slam Laje, the first battle of poetry spoken of Complexo do Alemão, where she lives.

Bangkok Post (20 July – Thailand)

“Finding opportunity in crisis”

Under the framework of the 2005 Convention on Promoting and Protecting the Diversity of Cultural Expressions, Unesco Bangkok has been organising a series of webinars since May with leading members of Thailand’s cultural and creative industry sectors and civil society assessing the impact of Covid-19, new challenges, and required changes at the policy level. Sessions have covered independent film, literature and publishing, performing arts, visual and fine arts, architecture and design, music, and heritage sites and museums as part of the global movement #ResiliArt.
