A CALL TO SEEK, SHARE AND ACT ON FACTUAL INFORMATION

March 2021 marks over one year since the universal lockdown occasioned by the need to curb the spread of Covid-19 pandemic. As the prevailing global topic of the year 2020, continuing in 2021, the world has since witnessed the radical polarization, divided opinions and “different facts and belief-systems”. This is especially manifested among global citizens on social media platforms. The World Health Organisation (WHO) has dubbed the disinformation aspects of this global crisis as an infodemic - “an overabundance of information, some accurate and some not, that makes it hard for people to find trustworthy sources or reliable guidance when they need it”. (WHO, 2020)

Alongside the coronavirus, misinformation has spread far and wide, hampering the management of the pandemic with the drowning of factual information and credible sources needed to inform remedial and preventive action. In Africa for example, governments have taken different paths and adopted varying health protocols in the management of the pandemic, with mixed results. Now, the main challenge concerning the management of the pandemic is overcoming misinformation and conspiracy theories around Covid-19 vaccination. In the words of University of Utah’s Thi Nguyen, “the crucial issue right now isn’t what people hear, but whom to believe.” And this is where media and information literacy strategies are called upon to complement the efforts by healthcare experts and other players to contain the coronavirus.

The UNESCO MIL Alliance and the World Health Organisation are considering a partnership to adopt a media and information literacy approach for effective communication on Covid-19 issues. There is need to consolidate factual information from various experts and actors at the global, regional and national levels, and forge key collaborations in the preparation and dissemination of targeted information for various audiences, communities and groups.
The UNESCO MIL Alliance continues to play a key role in this regard as we forge ahead towards the achievement of the stated goal - media and information literacy for all, and by all.
